On 07/27/15 at 1113 hours, the California State Warning center was advised by Union Pacific Railroad (UPRR) of reported a derailment which resulted from uncontrolled movement of a railcar. The uncontrolled movement event was over prior to the CSWC being notified. One railcar rolled for 1-2 miles at the West Colton Rail Yard in Bloomington, San Bernardino County. The railcar hit a derailment device and derailed on its side. The railcar contained sand, some of which was released onto the ground. Investigation and re-railing is ongoing. There where no injuries and no hazmat release. The California State Warning Center conducted all appropriate notifications, including but not limited to local government agencies.

Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

- SOC / Inland REOC remains activated in support of 2014 Drought

SITUATION SUMMARY

Weather of Concern

- Red Flag Warning in effect from 0200 hours on 07/28/15 until 1100 hours 7/29/15 for portions on Siskiyou County
- Red Flag Warning in effect from 0200 to 1100 Tuesday for portions of Del Norte, Humboldt, Mendocino, and Trinity Counties
- Fire Weather Watch in effect from Tuesday evening through Wednesday morning for portions of Del Norte, Humboldt, Mendocino, and Trinity Counties

Northern California & Central Coast

- High temperatures will soar above 100 degrees on Tuesday across many interior valleys. Temperatures along the coast will rise above 70 degrees with records in jeopardy.

Central California AND Southern San Joaquin Valley:

- High pressure will build into the region this week. This will lead to breezy northerly winds, mainly across the Coastal Range and northern/western Sacramento Valley through Tuesday. Locally breezy easterly winds are possible later tonight into Tuesday across the Sierra. Fuels will dry out in these areas given low humidity (10-15%) and poor overnight recovery. Temperatures will begin to warm today and will reach the triple digits in the Valley for Tuesday through Thursday. Highs in the 100s likely to continue through at least Sunday for northern Sacramento Valley. Mild overnight lows are expected which may lead to heat-related illnesses and impacts if action is not taken. In addition, monsoon moisture will make a northward surge Friday into the weekend. Scattered mountain thunderstorms will be possible which may lead to additional fire starts.

Southern California:

- High pressure over the area will drive temperatures into the upper 90s to lower 100s Wednesday and Thursday, subsiding by just a degree or two Friday through Sunday. At the same time, southeast flow around the large high centered over the desert southwest will bring a deep layer of monsoonal moisture into the area. The combination of high temperatures and increasing humidities may cause some areas to approach excessive heat levels, especially Wednesday and Thursday. There will be a chance of thunderstorms over the area Wednesday through Thursday evening, followed by thunderstorm chances each afternoon and evening period through Sunday. The thunderstorms will be most likely to develop over the mountains and deserts east of the mountains. Any storms that develop will be capable of producing heavy downpours, dangerous cloud to ground lightning, strong gusty winds, and flash flooding. The flash flood risk will be highest over recent burn scars, but any steep, loose soils and/or dry washes will have a risk of producing flash floods and debris flows.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A low pressure trough is exiting the Northern California region today and high pressure is building in from the south. The NW to N winds that developed last night will become N to NE today and NE to E Tuesday and Wednesday. The winds will peak tonight and Tuesday with wind-prone areas from the lower western Cascade-Sierra slopes to the coastal range seeing gusts to 20-30 mph. Locally stronger winds can be expected in NE-SW channels of the Cascade-Sierra foothills through early Wednesday. High pressure aloft will also be strengthening over the area this week, pushing afternoon temperatures up to 5-10 degrees above normal by Wednesday. The winds will enhance these conditions from the lower Cascade-Sierra foothills to the coast. A lighter N to E wind pattern will continue through the end of the week. Limited monsoon moisture is expected to move northward into Northern California by late Thursday. Isolated somewhat dry afternoon and evening thunderstorms are possible near the higher terrain Thursday and Friday. Thunderstorms will be more numerous and produce more rainfall as the pattern continues over the weekend.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Temperatures will be near to a little below normal today as a Pacific trough over the West Coast moves eastward. Maximum temperatures will be in the 70s to low 80s across the mountains with mid 80s to mid 90s in the valleys. The marine layer has shrunk to around 1,000 feet across Central California, but it has deepened to around 2,500 feet across Southern California this morning. Strong high pressure over Texas will shift slowly westward causing the marine layer to shrink Tuesday and it may be completely gone by Wednesday or Thursday. The strengthening high pressure area will also bring a warming trend to much of the region Tuesday through Friday. Most inland valley and foothill locations will see temperatures over the 100 degree mark by Wednesday. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the 12% to 25% range above the marine layer through Tuesday, except it will be in the single digits across the deserts. Scattered showers and thunderstorms will form mainly over the mountains and deserts of Southern California starting Wednesday and then spread northward to include the Sierra Thursday. The shower and thunderstorm activity will decrease starting Sunday, with isolated activity confined to the mountains and deserts. Temperatures will cool a little this weekend as the strong high pressure area shifts slowly back to the east.
